

The Teleconference - an indispensable Collaboration Tool

Now hosting a teleconference with participants located in geographically diverse locations is simple.

It's no wonder that teleconferencing users are growing globally at a steady pace every year. It's becoming more important to have meetings between attendees that may be in disparate worldwide locations. Global teleconferences are the solution.

Conference calling is most likely the most economic collaboration tool for teams of associates that need to share and collaborate no matter where they are located. In the USA or any other country.

Team Building & Collaboration

There are four main conference calling types: toll free, toll conference calling, International Conference Calls and Video Web Conference.

With toll free conference calling, all participants dial a toll free 800 number, to access your conference calls. The call is free to the caller.

With a toll free plan, the main benefit is that the access to the conference call is paid for by the host.

With toll free conference calling, each caller dials a U.S./Canada 800 number.

The International Conference Calling plan also offers Toll Free access for the participants. The toll free dial-in numbers are available from 60+ countries.

Business Class features

- Free session recordings with MP3 file
- Toll Free access from 60 countries
- 24 hour operator assistance
- Extremely low international rates

Many participants dial-in using their cell phones and since most cell phone plans include nationwide long distance, there is an excellent chance there will be no long distance charge for the participant to use their cell phone to access the teleconference if the caller has nationwide long distance included in their cell phone plan.

With a cell phone, only an airtime deduction may apply unless the conference call takes place during a "free nights and weekends" period calling option in which case, there would be no airtime deduction. If the cell phone service was an unlimited usage plan there would be no extra usage charges.
